Summary

For centuries, the limited local availability of building materials determined the construction methods in the alpine mountain village. Today, vernacular architecture is no longer imperative, but has the potential to enhance the local context and provide answers to current architectural questions.